

Walking to School

Story adapted from: "Stories About the Bahá'í Funds" by Gloria Faizi

*B*ahá'ís in Bolivia wanted to help by building a few schools in their country, but they didn't have enough money. They asked for help from other Bahá'ís. Bahá'ís all over the world were happy and excited to help! They thought of many creative ways to help. Soon gifts from all over the world went to Bolivia!

Soon young people in the United Kingdom wanted to help too! Every morning, to save money, instead of taking the bus, they walked to school! Some of the youth had to walk far to get to school. Some days the weather was cold, on other days it was rainy...and others it was both. The friends kept walking. In the end, they played their part. They saved enough money to help build one of the schools in Bolivia! And they did all this before the Fast was over.

What other ideas can you think of to raise money for the Fund?
